THEMES:

Astronomically speaking, Saturn demarcated the visual boundary of the known solar system to the ancients. Thus, he symbolically took residence as governor of all immutable laws implicit in incarnation: time, boundaries, and death. Saturn binds us to the world of form, the body, and represents the Soul incarnate. Saturn thus relates to the five sensory experiences of the world and mundane life.

Within the archetype of Saturn, there are always embedded issues of something new emerging into our Ego structures. The new demands the dethronement of the old—an old idea of who we are, no longer tenable to our Soul's desire to incarnate more into our lives.

Because our Egos are structured in part by our external environment, Saturn relates greatly to outer civil, parental, religious, and governmental authorities as structures which initially house our nascent Soul's emergence into the world as our Ego forms. Saturn also acts as the guardian of the threshold where inner Soul meets outer authorities of life. There is always a struggle at this threshold—a struggle that speaks to how much we've internalized the voices of the outer world in ways that repress (eat) the inner creative urges of our Soul. Symbolically, this corresponds greatly with the suppressing of a new creative pantheon of forces within you in favor of maintaining status quo.

The planetary archetype of Saturn is a force we are bound to wrestle with—a force that demands that we dialogue with our issues of power and dethronement on the internal and external level. This includes negotiating with the inherited past in order to consciously create the future—not something that can be done through the type of transcendence and positive affirmations which are in vogue these days.

Saturn is no joy ride yet he will always offer up that which we earn through disciplined self-effort. It is through Saturn that we are given the opportunity to birth ourselves anew through our own efforts, and to move into adulthood and authenticity. To do so, however, this archetype demands that we search out the fissures in our Ego structure which manifest as insecurities and externalized needs for validation, so that we can truly become the co-creators we were born to be. In this way, Saturn is the archetypal arbiter of our inner authority.
